The Capture of Mr. Davis.
Is Mr. Jefferson Davis' forthcoming history of the late civil war the following account of his capture will be read with interest:

"After a short time I was hailed by a voice which I recognized as that of my private secretary, who informed me that the marauders had been hanging around the camp, and that he and others were on foot around it and were expecting an assault as soon as the moon went down. A silly story had got abroad that it was a treacherous trap, and our sacred flames had probably incited these marauders, as it subsequently transpired General J. H. Wilson to send out a large force to capture the same train.

For the protection of my family I travelled with them two or three days, when, believing that they had passed out of the region of marauders, I determined to leave them accompanied at nightfall, to exercise my original purpose. My horse and those of my party proper were saddled preparatory to a start, when one of my staff, who had ridden into the neighboring village, returned and told me that he had heard that a marauding party intended to attack the camp that night. This decided me to wait long enough to see whether there was any truth in the rumor, which I supposed would be rectified in a few hours. My horse remained saddled and my pistol in the holsters, and I lay down, fully dressed, to rest. Nothing occurred to rouse me until just before dawn, when my coachman, a free colored man, who faithfully clung to our fortunes, came and told me there was firing over the braces, just behind our encampment. I stepped out of my wife's tent and saw some horsemen, when I immediately recognized as cavalry, displaying around the encampment. I turned back and told my wife these were not the expected marauders, but regular troops. She implored me to leave her at once. I hesitated, from unwillingness to do so, and lost a few precious moments before yielding to her importunity. My horse and arms were near the road on which I expected to leave, and when the cavalry approached, I was therefore unable to reach them. I was compelled to start in the opposite direction. As it was quite dark in the tent, I picked up what was supposed to be my "baggage," a waterproof light overcoat, without, however, it was subsequently found to be my wife's, so very like my own as to be mistaken for it; as I started, my wife thoughtfully threw over my head and shoulders a shawl. I had gone perhaps fifteen or twenty yards when a trooper galloped up and ordered me to halt and surrender, to which I gave a defiant answer, and dropping the shawl and rein from my shoulders, advanced toward him. He leveled his carbine at me, but I exposed if he fired he would miss me, and my intention was in that event to put my hand under his foot, tumble him off on the other side, spring into his saddle and attempt to escape. My wife, who had been watching, when she saw the soldier aim his carbine at me, ran forward and threw her arms around me. Success depended on instantaneous action, and, recognizing that the opportunity had been lost, I turned back, and the morning being damp and chilly, passed on to a fire beyond the tent. Our pursuers had taken different roads, and approached our camp from opposite directions; they circled each other and commenced firing, both supposing they had met our armed escort, and some casualties resulted from their conflict with an imaginary body of Confederate troops. During the confusion, while attention was concentrated upon myself, except by those who were engaged in pillage, one of my aides, Colonel J. Taylor Wood, with Lieutenant Brewster, walked off unobserved. His daring exploit on the sea had made him on the part of the federal government an object of special hostility, and rendered it quite proper that he should avail himself of every possible means of escape. Colonel Pritchard went over to their battle line, and I did not see him for a long time, scarcely more than an hour after my capture. He subsequently earned credit, in a conversation with me, for the forbearance shown by his men in not shooting me when I refused to surrender. Wilson and others have uttered many falsehoods in regard to my capture, which have been exposed in publications by persons there present—by Secretary Reagan, by the members of my personal staff, and by the colored coachman, Jim Jones, which must have been convincing to all who were not given over to believe a lie. For this reason I will postpone to some other time and more appropriate place any further notice of the story and its variations, all the spawn of a malignity that slanders the civilization of the age. We were, when prisoners, subjected to petty pillage."
